This thesis is dedicated to my beloved husband Thilo Thöner
who has steadfastly supported me in my work.

To my children Marco and B'Elanna,
my parents Che Joseph and Ngum Susan Che,
my parents-in-law Herbert and Waltraut Thöner,
my sisters Mercy and Lilian,
my brother-in-law Marco,
my niece Abi and Nephew Ngwa Junior.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I want to thank my supervisors, who always gave me the necessary time to develop my own ideas and provided me with guidance when appropriate through constructive criticisms. I also want to thank them for helping me to secure the finances necessary for this study, without which I would not have been able to complete my thesis.

The Landesgraduiertenförderung Baden-Württemberg funded this study, whose contributions I gratefully acknowledge. Special thanks also go to the Wissenschaftliche Gesellschaft Freiburg, for taking over the travel costs to the research area.

Thanks also to the conservation projects – GTZ, PROGEPP, WWF and the Dzanga-Sangha Project working in the research area, for readily incorporating my PhD project into their working plan. I am also grateful for the efforts made to provide me with accommodation and to make my stay in the area a successful one. My sincere thanks go to the field assistants from the various projects who accompanied me to the villages, for their dedication in helping me during our stay in the villages.

Although too numerous to provide a list of all names here, I wish to extend my appreciation to the local population in Yenga, Nguilili, Lindjombo, Kounda Papaye, Ngatongo and Ikelemba, who devoted their time to the research team and warmly accepted me into their communities, thus helping to make the study a success.

My profound gratitude is due to my dear husband for his love, patience and encouragement and most especially for believing in me. You are my hero. Many thanks also go to my parents and parents-in-law, sisters, brother-in-law, niece, nephew and all the relatives and friends who have contributed through their moral, spiritual and financial support during my study.
